Re : Financial Controlling Expert

Managing financial control across GIP, GPFO, GPRO, and HO&OE inside GSO means holding together a growing perimeter of transformation projects with complex funding structures, multiple legal entities, and Group compliance standards that don't bend. That's a controlling job with real teeth, not a reporting exercise.

I've built this kind of financial discipline from the ground up. At CNP, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints for a €350bn portfolio, delivering in 18 months, on schedule, with full audit traceability. That work required the same combination this role demands: technical mastery of accounting standards, tight closing discipline, and enough authority to be the gatekeeper when processes or figures don't hold up. I've also run PMO and AMOA missions where the real deliverable was aligning Finance, Actuarial, IT, and Operations around a single version of the truth for budget versus forecast versus actuals, exactly the kind of consolidated view GSO project teams need during rolling forecast cycles. On IFRS 9 and IFRS 17 implementations, I worked directly with FX, transfer pricing, and VAT parameters feeding into financial planning, so the technical vocabulary of this role isn't new to me.

I haven't worked inside a Group Operations cost-recharging model specifically, though I've built recharge and cost accounting mechanisms in comparable multi-entity finance functions.

Happy to walk through how this maps to the GSO scope on a call.
