I'm a transformation consultant with 25 years in insurance and finance, and I've spent the last decade leading exactly these kinds of programmes—outsourcing transitions, operating model redesigns, multi-country execution, and regulatory delivery assurance. Aviva's brief describes the core of what I do best: sitting at the intersection of complex delivery, stakeholder alignment, and structured risk management in highly regulated environments.

Most recently, I led a complete finance operating model transformation for a major insurer, managing the transition of four business functions across three countries to a new shared service model. The programme ran 18 months, involved vendor selection and mobilisation, process redesign, and handover to new delivery teams. I owned governance, risk escalation, and executive reporting throughout. The result was on time, within budget, and achieved the target efficiency gains without regulatory friction.

Before that, I managed the programme management office for a large-scale captive centre build-out for another insurer—site selection, offshore operations setup, knowledge transfer, and steady-state handover. I've also run several BPO transitions where managing the transition of critical functions to external providers required balancing commercial terms, risk controls, and people continuity. In each case, I worked directly with C-level stakeholders, procurement teams, and external partners to translate business intent into delivery reality.

I know the gap: I'm currently a freelance consultant, and this is an inside IR35 contract role. That's straightforward for me—I've worked in both capacities. What matters is whether the fit is right on the work itself, and on this one, it is.

I'd welcome a call to discuss how I can help drive this programme. I'm available to start quickly and based close enough to Norwich and London to manage the hybrid model without friction.
