Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm writing to apply for the Consultant Regulatory Reporting position at Deloitte's Düsseldorf office. With 25 years in finance and insurance—the last decade spent precisely at the intersection of regulatory reporting, risk management, and digital transformation—I can hit the ground running on projects where clarity and execution discipline matter most.

My value here is specific. I've spent the last eight years as an interim Finance Manager and AMOA lead, designing and implementing regulatory reporting frameworks for insurers navigating Solvency II, IFRS 17, and multi-jurisdictional compliance. I've customized reporting tools, built dashboards that actually drive decision-making, and led teams through the messy part: aligning Finance, Risk, and IT when regulatory deadlines won't wait. One recent project: I redesigned a bank's entire risk reporting process, reducing month-end close time by 35% while strengthening controls—combining process discipline with hands-on tool optimization (RPA pilots, data architecture review).

I understand your need clearly. Banks face compounding regulatory pressure, digital complexity, and the need for rapid, reliable reporting infrastructure. You're looking for someone who speaks both languages: technical enough to customize software and validate implementation, pragmatic enough to know what actually works operationally, and senior enough to navigate stakeholder complexity without losing momentum.

The honest gap: I've worked as a freelance consultant and through my own advisory firm for the last five years. I'm looking to return to structured, full-time work where I can build alongside a team and commit to long-term client relationships at Deloitte's scale.

I'm ready to discuss how my background fits your pipeline. Let's talk.

Best regards,
Xavier Robitaille
