Dear Hiring Manager,

I bring 25 years in insurance and finance—all of it. My last three years as an independent consultant have sharpened what I already knew: I add most value where technical depth, regulatory constraint, and delivery pressure collide.

IFRS 17 implementation is exactly that territory. I've spent the last decade navigating overlapping demands from Finance, Actuariat, IT, and Risk. I've redesigned closing processes under Solvency II pressure, rebuilt financial reporting stacks, and coached teams through multi-year transformation programs. I know the gap between what the standard demands and what legacy systems can deliver—and how to close it.

Two concrete examples: Last year I led a full Solvency II/IFRS 9 redesign for a €2B+ French insurer. We mapped 47 separate data flows, rebuilt controls, and cut reporting timeline by 40%. Before that, I ran the PMO office for a major Dutch life insurer's accounting transformation—governance, stakeholder alignment, technical delivery. Both taught me that success on these mandates requires someone who speaks Actuariat natively, understands Finance constraints, and doesn't get lost in the complexity.

PwC's positioning on IFRS 17—consulting plus execution, multidisciplinary teams, technology embedded—is where consulting should be. My background is as a delivery operator, not a pure advisor. I've lived inside the control rooms these implementations create. That's probably closer to "hands-on partner" than to the traditional manager profile you'd normally see.

I'm based in France but genuinely interested in Amsterdam-based projects. The travel and the market don't concern me.

Let's talk.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
