Dear Chaucer Group Hiring Team,

I'm applying for the Finance Technology Delivery Manager role because I've spent 25 years doing exactly this work—blending deep finance and insurance expertise with disciplined programme delivery—and this mission aligns precisely with where I add the most value.

I've built my career at the intersection of finance transformation, regulatory complexity, and execution pressure. Most recently, I've led end-to-end delivery of finance modernisation programmes in insurance: system implementations spanning data architecture, process redesign, and operating model change. I'm comfortable translating between finance strategy and technical roadmaps, managing multi-year initiatives, and embedding sustainable change into business-as-usual operations. I've managed similar governance structures, stakeholder alignment across Finance, Technology, and Product teams, and delivery accountability from initiation through transition.

What makes me useful here is that I understand both sides. I can challenge poorly scoped finance requirements because I've lived inside CFO offices. I can speak credibly to technology constraints because I've managed programmes where systems, data, and process change had to move together. And I've learned that on complex transformation work, clarity, discipline, and early honesty about dependencies matter more than heroic late-stage firefighting.

I should flag upfront: I'm currently independent (Expert Zone Advisory), so this is an FTC contract role, which suits my model well. I've done similar fixed-term mandates and delivered them cleanly.

I'd welcome a conversation to explore whether my background maps to your specific portfolio priorities and delivery environment.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
