I'm a transformation and delivery specialist with 25 years in insurance and finance. I've spent the last decade building alignment between business, product, and operations on complex change programs —exactly what this Claims Transformation Manager role requires.

My most relevant recent work: I led the operating model redesign for a P&C insurer's claims function, defining the product vision across three business units with competing priorities. I established KPIs with CFO and Claims leadership, built the business case ($2.3M efficiency gain over 18 months), and coordinated the handoff to product delivery. The work meant translating technical constraints into business language and keeping stakeholders moving in the same direction under budget pressure.

Before that, I managed PMO governance and AMOA for a major regulatory transformation program in insurance—250+ people, €8M+ budget, three-year scope. I'm comfortable with budget ownership, success metrics definition, and making trade-offs between ambition and delivery reality.

I work as an independent consultant, which means I'm used to moving fast, owning outcomes, and adapting to how organizations actually work (not how org charts suggest they should). A 12-month fixed role is ideal for me right now. I can start quickly and commit fully without the ramp-up time you'd get from an external hire with no insurance background.

The hybrid model in Dublin works well. I can be in Elm Park when it matters for stakeholder alignment.

I'm ready to talk about how you're approaching the self-serve shift and where the biggest coordination challenges sit.
