Dear Hiring Manager,

With 25 years in insurance and finance—all of it in roles bridging technical complexity, regulatory constraints, and delivery pressure—I bring exactly what your multi-domain project team needs: someone who orchestrates across silos without getting lost in them.

I've spent the last decade leading portfolio delivery and PMO work for financial services firms facing the same challenge you do: aligning actuaries, IT, operations, and the CFO office around shared timelines. At Expert Zone Advisory, I designed and scaled PMO governance for a major insurer's digital transformation, reducing stakeholder friction by clarifying scope upfront and maintaining ruthless discipline on project framing. That's the critical first 20% of project success.

What sets me apart isn't methodology—it's judgment. I've helped teams say no to scope creep without derailing relationships. I've reframed failing initiatives by surfacing the real constraint (usually organizational, not technical). I know how to read a room: when to push back, when to escalate, when to simplify a conversation that's gotten abstract.

The honest reality: I've been freelance for five years. I chose autonomy. But the MACIF opportunity genuinely interests me—a 15-person team with clear mission alignment, a mutualiste structure where delivery serves real members, and the chance to build something sustained rather than parachute in and out. That's different from my recent pattern.

I'm ready for a conversation about fit—both ways. My calendar is open, and I'm reachable at xro@xavier-robitaille.com or +33 6 64 89 09 43.

Best regards,
Xavier Robitaille
