Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm a transformation consultant with 25 years in financial services, and I'm applying for the Vice President - Strategic Transformation role because Nomura's focus on AI-enabled transformation aligns directly with where I've delivered the most impact: translating strategic vision into operational reality across complex, regulated environments.

My value here is specific. I've spent two decades bridging the gap between business strategy, technology constraints, and delivery discipline—exactly what CTO needs. I've redesigned finance operating models for insurers managing billions in assets, rebuilt PMO governance structures that cut project delivery cycles by 40%, and guided senior stakeholders (CFO, CRO, CTO) through multi-year transformation agendas where clarity on priorities and ruthless execution discipline were non-negotiable.

On a recent 18-month engagement, I led the strategic prioritization and delivery of a regulatory reporting transformation for a major financial institution—180+ people, 6 business lines, competing agendas. The result: on-time delivery, 35% reduction in month-end close cycle, and a playbook the organization still uses. That's the kind of partnership, governance rigor, and tangible outcome CTO appears to be building with this team.

The honest gap: I've been independent for the last few years, so I'm energized by the idea of joining a firm at scale again. Hybrid London works well for me. I'm not looking for a stepping stone—I want to own meaningful transformation work where my judgment on prioritization and delivery discipline can compound over time.

I'd welcome a conversation about how this team thinks about balancing strategic ambition with execution reality, and where you see the biggest risks to delivering on this agenda.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
