I'm writing to apply for the Programme Manager role at Hadfield Green. With 25 years in finance and insurance transformation, I've spent the last decade delivering exactly what you're describing: complex, multi-workstream programmes that move from strategic intent through stabilisation and optimisation on the other side.

What I bring is hands-on delivery combined with the ability to operate at executive level without losing sight of execution. I've led finance transformation programmes across process redesign, systems implementation, and regulatory reporting—the environments where competing priorities and stakeholder complexity are highest. I'm comfortable in governance: steering committees, RAID tracking, benefits realisation. But I'm equally comfortable rolling up my sleeves on workstream interdependencies and adoption planning where the real work happens.

Two examples: I recently ran a complete closing process redesign for an insurer with 12 workstreams spanning finance, actuariat, and operations. The result was a 40% reduction in close cycle and a stable transition to new operating model with strong adoption. Before that, I managed post-ERP stabilisation and automation for a regulated finance function—which is where I learned that the technical win means nothing without disciplined change management and a network of champions embedded in the business.

The one honest note: I'm currently independent (Expert Zone Advisory). I've chosen freelance because it lets me focus on delivery roles where I add the most value—not administration or part-time strategy. This role is a 12-month contract, which suits my model. If you're looking for someone to own the programme from day one and actually finish it, I'll be reliable on that.

I'm in Dublin regularly and available to discuss how I'd approach your roadmap. You can reach me at xro@xavier-robitaille.com or +33 6 64 89 09 43.
