Your finance transformation programme needs someone who has already rebuilt this machine three times over. I've spent 25 years in insurance and finance—not in theory, but in the CFO office, directing process redesigns, closing operations, and steering teams through regulatory and operational complexity.

This role sits exactly where I add the most value: where technical rigour meets execution discipline. At Crédit Agricole's holding company, I led a full operating model redesign for group accounting and controlling across 12+ entities—process mapping, standardisation frameworks, KPI architecture, the whole scope. We cut closing cycles by 35 days and built a replicable template the group still uses. More recently, I've guided similar programmes in insurance: process harmonisation, centre of excellence design, reporting consolidation. The pattern repeats: assessment, target model definition, phased rollout, team alignment.

I work fast without cutting corners. You need someone who speaks both the CFO's language and the controller's—who can see where a process breaks across borders, design the fix, and land it without disrupting month-end. I also come with a PMO discipline: governance, workstream tracking, stakeholder rhythm. No theatre, just clarity on what's done, what's pending, and where friction lives.

I'm currently independent (Expert Zone Advisory), so I move quickly into environment, build credibility with your Warsaw hub and local teams, and sustain the programme momentum through implementation. I don't need onboarding time.
