Re : Head of Transformation

Reshaping how a Claims function serves customers while integrating a newly acquired business, under one programme umbrella, is not a routine transformation brief. It asks for someone who can hold technology modernisation, operating model redesign and integration work together without losing delivery discipline.

That combination is where I've spent most of my career. At CNP, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints across 350 billion euros of assets under management, delivering in 18 months and on schedule, while realigning Finance, Actuarial and IT teams around a single target operating model. On a separate mandate, I led a data migration and interface cutover for an insurer's investment sub-ledger, covering UAT, cahiers des charges and reconciliation of legacy suspense accounts, so the new system went live without a restatement. Both cases needed the same thing this role needs: spotting dependency risks before they surface, and keeping executive stakeholders aligned as priorities shift mid-programme. My PMP certification (2025) formalised governance habits I'd already built running these delivery structures.

I haven't led a Claims integration following an acquisition specifically. My integration experience sits in finance and investment operations, not the claims environment itself.

Hybrid delivery is standard practice for me. My most recent engagement, with Clearwater Analytics, ran fully in that mode, coordinating distributed teams across time zones without losing pace. Let's find 30 minutes to discuss where the programme stands today.
