I bring 25 years of insurance and finance expertise—the kind that sits at the intersection of technical depth, regulatory constraint, and delivery pressure. I've spent my career making complex transformations actually stick, which is rare because it requires both the rigor to design it right and the credibility to hold it together across Finance, Actuariat, IT, and Operations.

My last three years as interim Finance Manager taught me where most transformations crack: not at the strategy layer, but at the translation layer—the gap between what CFOs need and what teams can execute. I've built that bridge before. On a EUR 1.5B finance replatform, I designed the control framework and closing playbook that survived the migration and actually reduced month-end cycle time by 35%. On another mandate, I diagnosed a regulatory reporting bottleneck that looked like a data problem; it was a process design problem. Rebuilt it, cut the effort by 40%, improved accuracy.

You're likely considering me for continuity or pace—or both. I work best on missions with real leverage: where clarity moves the needle, where discipline matters, where you need someone who thinks like an operator, not just a consultant. I'm not looking to build an empire or stay longer than the work demands. Freelance structure lets me move with the calendar and your actual needs—not headcount cycles.

Let's talk about what you're trying to solve and where the friction really is.
