I've spent 25 years solving the problems that happen when finance, insurance, and regulation collide. Most of your complexity lives there—in the gap between what the CFO needs, what compliance requires, and what your systems can actually deliver. That's where I add the most value.

I've redesigned closing processes that cut month-end cycles by 40%, rebuilt PMO governance for €500M+ transformation programmes, and built reporting infrastructure that satisfied both actuarial teams and regulators simultaneously. The pattern is consistent: I find the dependencies others miss, make the trade-offs explicit, and get teams aligned around outcomes that actually matter.

I know the transition from freelance to permanent can feel like a risk on both sides. I've been independent because the right roles are rare—I need delivery complexity, senior stakeholder management, and work that requires judgment, not just execution. That hasn't changed. But I'm open to the right structure if the role itself is real.

Let's talk for 30 minutes. You'll either see quickly whether this makes sense, or you won't.
