I bring 25 years of finance and insurance experience directly into regulatory reporting and business transformation—exactly what you need for this role.

My background is rare: I've spent two decades building regulatory compliance frameworks, designing financial reporting processes, and translating complex regulations into operational reality. At Expert Zone Advisory, I've led cross-functional teams through major regulatory implementations across securities trading, fund administration, and reporting infrastructure. I speak the language of compliance officers, IT architects, and business stakeholders equally well.

What matters here: I've worked deep in the specifics your role demands. I've implemented EMIR and MiFID/MiFIR reporting systems for asset managers, designed data consolidation pipelines for securities operations, and written functional specifications that made sense to both regulators and developers. I understand how regulatory requirements actually translate into system design—not as theory, but from shipping real projects. I read regulatory texts the way you need to: not for compliance theater, but for what they demand operationally. That's where most consultants miss the mark.

One honest thing: I'm positioned as a senior independent consultant, not a permanent hire. What that means in practice is I bring senior judgment immediately and work like an owner. If you're building this function and need someone who can land running and mentor junior staff without ramp-up time, that's where I add fastest value. I'm open about the CDI vs. consulting question because the right fit matters more than the title.

I'm fluent in German at C1+ and speak French, English, and German professionally—so Frankfurt and a German-speaking team is straightforward.

Let's talk about what you're building here.
