Your transformation programme needs someone who can sit between business complexity and delivery reality. That's where I work best—and it's exactly what this role demands.

I've spent 25 years in insurance and finance, most of it orchestrating cross-functional change where stakes are high: regulatory deadlines, legacy system constraints, competing stakeholder agendas. At Expert Zone Advisory, I've led programme delivery and business case design for insurers navigating similar terrain—process redesign, system migrations, operating model shifts. The pattern is consistent: clarity on what you're solving, disciplined scoping, and relentless focus on benefits realisation separates projects that stick from those that don't.

Two examples. Last year, I piloted a regulatory reporting transformation for a mid-sized insurer, coordinating Finance, Actuariat, and IT across a six-month timeline. Mapped existing pain points, built a phased roadmap, and ran the governance structure that kept stakeholders aligned despite competing priorities. Delivered on time. More recently, I designed a process redesign for an indemnification function—very similar to your Direction's challenge—which cut manual intervention by 40% and reduced approval cycles from 8 days to 3.

I'm freelance by structure, not by commitment. I function like a senior permanent hire: I own delivery end-to-end, I show up consistently, and I stay until the work is done. Your CDD timeline (June–November) is my sweet spot—defined scope, focused mission, clear success metrics. No transition friction. I can start immediately if needed.

Let's talk about what success looks like for the indemnisation transformation and how I can accelerate it.
