

Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm writing to express my interest in the Programme Manager role at AXA Partners Shannon. With 25 years in insurance and finance transformation—the last decade specifically in programme delivery and operational redesign—I recognize immediately what the Samsara programme requires: someone who can navigate competing stakeholder demands, lock down governance, and deliver complex change at pace.

What makes this role a fit isn't generic enthusiasm for transformation. It's that I've spent my career exactly at the intersection of your constraints: regulatory reporting frameworks, cost pressure, process complexity, and the need to land strategic initiatives while keeping operations stable. I've built the governance models, managed the stakeholder maps, and reported the hard metrics that executives actually need to make decisions.

Two concrete examples. I led a process redesign in a €50M+ finance shared service where I restructured governance from fragmented steering into a single decision-making cadre, reduced project slippage from 6 months to zero variance over 18 months, and delivered 22% operational cost reduction while absorbing new regulatory reporting requirements. More recently, I designed and implemented an end-to-end operating model change across three countries for a credit insurance unit—similar scale and stakeholder complexity to what Samsara will require. Both involved the exact capability you need: translating strategy into executable workstreams, managing resource constraints, and keeping fractured stakeholder groups aligned.

I should be direct: I'm currently independent, and I typically operate as a freelance consultant. This role is a full-time programme lead. If you're looking for someone to own Samsara day-to-day with deep accountability, that's the shift I'm ready to make for a mission that matches this scale.

I'm available to discuss how I'd approach the first 90 days of governance setup and stakeholder alignment.

Best regards,
