Re : Hedge Fund Accounting Manager - Remote

Running an A-Z fund accounting model, where one person owns NAV production, investor reporting and the client relationship end to end, is a specific bet: it only works if the technical lead can also carry the relationship without a separate RM function to fall back on.

My background sits squarely in that overlap. I've built and maintained sub-ledger accounting for securities portfolios under IFRS 9, covering amortized cost, ECL, and asset categorization, with the reconciliation discipline that valuation sign-off requires. I've taken SimCorp Dimension and Clearwater Analytics from design through to production, including the control and reconciliation logic that NAV outputs and pricing checks rely on, the same work your performance fee calculations and capital activity reviews depend on. On migration and cutover projects, I've written the UAT specifications myself and run the acceptance testing that catches valuation breaks before they reach a client, which is the kind of early escalation this role needs when pricing or investor allocations don't tie out.

I haven't run a hedge fund accounting team day
