Re : Strategic Project Manager (Finance) - Remote

Modernizing financial infrastructure while keeping budgeting, forecasting, and regulatory reporting tight across cross-functional teams is a demanding brief, especially when senior leadership needs financial models that translate directly into ROI decisions.

I've spent 25 years building exactly that kind of infrastructure inside insurance and asset management, and the mechanics carry over directly. At CNP Assurances, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints, 350 billion euros in assets under management, delivered in 18 months, on schedule. That meant designing financial models, reconciling data across systems (SimCorp Dimension, Clearwater), and reporting to leadership under IFRS 9 and Solvency II standards simultaneously. I've applied the same feasibility discipline to system implementation decisions, building models to weigh cost, risk, and delivery timeline before committing to SimCorp Dimension and Clearwater rollouts, from conception through production. On the process side, I've redesigned fast-close and reconciliation workflows for finance teams under GAAP and IFRS, cutting closing cycles while keeping compliance intact. I've also taken over stalled programs and rebuilt governance from scratch, coordinating actuarial, IT, risk, and finance stakeholders who don't naturally agree on priorities.

My financial planning and forecasting work has been entirely within insurance and asset management, not in a technology or internet company. The discipline of budgeting, variance analysis, and stakeholder management transfers, the industry context wouldn't.
