I bring 25 years of insurance and finance experience directly applicable to leading PIC's transition programme. My background spans regulatory reporting, operating model redesign, and cross-functional programme delivery—exactly the mix needed to manage complex client transitions while aligning Operations, Finance, Actuarial, IT, and third-party partners.

Most relevant: I've led similar multi-stakeholder programmes in insurance transformation. At a major insurer, I redesigned the entire finance operating model across nine departments while managing concurrent client-facing projects. The discipline was identical to what you're describing—establish governance, reduce process variance, manage escalations, deliver outcomes consistently. That work reduced operational friction by 30% and improved client satisfaction measurably. I've also managed regulatory reporting programmes where misalignment between teams kills delivery; I became skilled at translating between technical and business stakeholders.

What I do best is the unglamorous work: building the right governance structure, documenting decision rights, making escalation paths clear, and holding the line on quality when speed pressure rises. I thrive in roles where multiple internal departments (Finance, Risk, Ops, IT) need to move together, because I speak their languages without favouring any one.

One clear difference: I've worked primarily as an independent consultant and interim manager, not in permanent corporate roles recently. That's been intentional—it's given me breadth and objectivity. But I'm genuinely interested in the stability and focus of a permanent head-of-function role at an organisation like PIC, where the mission is concrete and the stakes are high.

I'd welcome a conversation about how I'd build the programme leadership function and manage the stakeholder complexity. I'm available at your convenience.
