I bring 25 years of insurance and finance expertise directly to complex transformation programmes where technical depth, delivery discipline, and stakeholder alignment drive results. My value sits at the intersection of PMO rigour, AMOA capabilities, and CFO Office credibility—exactly where BCG's insurance clients need embedded operational experience.

I've led operating model redesigns and regulatory reporting transformations for tier-one insurers. On a major P&C insurer's finance transformation, I designed and embedded a closing process overhaul that reduced month-end cycle time by 40% while building the control infrastructure for Solvency II compliance. The work required translating between actuarial complexity, IT constraints, and CFO deadlines—three languages most consultants speak poorly. I stayed embedded through delivery, not just strategy, which is where real friction lives.

More recently, I've managed multi-stream programmes where I built PMO discipline across Finance, Operations, and Risk workstreams reporting to the CFO. The pattern is consistent: I add most value when a client needs someone who understands both the business logic and the execution reality, and who can speak credibly to CFOs, actuaries, and programme teams simultaneously.

I'm currently structured as an independent consultant (Expert Zone Advisory), which gives BCG flexibility on engagement model. If this role expects deep embedded delivery over months, that's my sweet spot. If it tilts toward senior advisory cycling across clients, we should discuss honestly—my track record is strongest on sustained transformation where continuity matters.

I'd welcome a conversation about how you're thinking about embedded senior resources versus traditional consulting cycles on your current insurance mandate.
