Re : Head of Corporate Finance

AXA Group Headquarters evaluates 30 to 40 M&A transactions a year and manages close to €7bn in annual dividend remittance across the Group's entities. Delivering on that agenda means coordinating Finance, Controlling, Legal and Tax around a single capital allocation view, while staying the reference point for top management and outside advisors on every deal. That is the kind of environment where 25 years of experience in insurance and in finance translate directly.

At SCOR, I spent four years in the investment function, the last two as chief transformation officer, working directly with top management to reshape how the function operated and reported, in a business where reinsurance, capital and holding-level decisions sit side by side. At CNP, I automated the projected financial production across asset classes (P&L, cash flows) and the Solvency II investment reporting: €350bn in assets, SimCorp Dimension from design to go-live, delivered in 18 months. That depth in capital and regulatory reporting is exactly what remittance and capital allocation decisions rest on. At Clearwater Analytics, as senior programme director, I ran several parallel implementations of a SaaS R2R solution, with monthly sponsor committees at top management level and consolidated tracking of deliverables, milestones and resources on Monday.com, including for a Luxembourg client, Luxempart. Earlier, I built the insurance practice at Primexis from scratch: 20 people, 10 clients, €3m in revenue, and a seat on the executive committee, which is the same kind of team leadership and stakeholder management this role calls for at a larger scale.

I operate as an independent consultant today. Nevertheless, I am perfectly open to a permanent role, directly or after an initial engagement period, given how closely this position matches what I want to do next.

I would be happy to discuss how this background applies to AXA's capital allocation and M&A agenda.

Best regards,
