I bring 25 years of insurance and finance expertise directly applicable to your Strategy Office mandate. My career has been built exactly at the intersection you need: translating complex analyses into executable strategy, managing stakeholder alignment at executive level, and delivering measurable outcomes in highly regulated environments.

I've spent the last decade as an interim consultant in senior finance and PMO roles across European insurers—work that mirrors your core challenges. In a 18-month engagement with a top-tier insurer, I redesigned their financial planning cycle, consolidated fragmented roadmaps into an integrated strategic plan, and established KPI dashboards that connected C-suite decisions to execution. That required the same translation skill you're describing: taking insights and turning them into clear, mobilizing direction.

I know the insurance ecosystem—life, non-life, regulatory constraints, the tension between transformation ambition and operational reality. I've worked directly with CFOs, COOs, and risk leadership; I speak the language of each without needing translation. French and Dutch are fluent.

The honest gap: I've been freelance for five years by choice, building my own consulting practice. Your role is a full-time commitment to one organization. That's a deliberate shift for me, but the right one at this stage. I'm looking for the depth that comes from owning outcomes over time, not parachuting in and out.

I'd welcome a conversation about how to translate my track record into the shape of this role. You can reach me at xro@xavier-robitaille.com or through my calendar at calendly.com/xrobitaille/30min.
