Re : Senior Project Manager

Roch Systems runs complex, multi-stakeholder technology projects for clients ranging from government to private enterprise, and the Senior Project Manager role sits right at the point where scope, budget, and vendor coordination can quietly fall apart on remote engagements. That's the specific problem I've spent 25 years solving inside insurance and finance IT.

I've led SimCorp Dimension and Clearwater Analytics implementations end to end, from conception through production cutover, coordinating technical leads, business owners, and external vendors against fixed go-live dates. At CNP Assurances, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints across 350 billion euros in assets, delivered in 18 months, on time, with UAT and data migration cahiers des charges written and owned by me. On the governance side, I've run risk tracking, change control, and executive stakeholder reporting on programs where finance, actuarial, and IT teams didn't naturally agree on priorities, and where getting that alignment right was the actual deliverable.

I don't hold a formal Project Management or IT degree. My academic background is a Master in Management from ESCP with a finance specialization, plus a PMP certification earned in 2025.

Happy to walk through specific project examples on a call if that's useful.
