Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm applying for the Head of Transformation role at Belfius because the Service Delivery program—redesigning end-to-end client journeys through process simplification, AI adoption, and operational resilience—matches exactly where I've delivered the most impact over 25 years in financial services.

Your description emphasizes translating strategy into measurable outcomes while managing complex stakeholder dynamics. That's my core strength. As an independent consultant, I've led transformation programs in insurance and banking where the stakes were equally high: regulatory compliance, legacy system constraints, and cross-functional buy-in all working against you simultaneously.

Two recent examples. At a major French insurer, I redesigned the finance operating model and closing process—cutting month-end from 15 days to 8, reducing manual controls by 40%, and embedding real-time reporting. At a pension fund, I restructured the PMO governance and program roadmap for a three-year digital transformation, improving delivery confidence and executive alignment significantly enough to unlock an additional €5M in investment. Both required the same discipline: defining scope rigorously, arbitrating priorities in real time, and communicating progress clearly to boards and C-suite.

The honest gap: I've been freelance for several years, so moving into a permanent leadership role at scale—directly managing teams and embedding into your Tech & Ops culture—is the right next step. I'm genuinely ready for it, and this role aligns with where I want to go.

I'd welcome a conversation about how to translate my track record into Belfius's transformation agenda.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
