Re : Strategic Project Manager (Finance) - Remote

Translating financial data into decisions that leadership can act on, while running cross-functional projects on budgeting, forecasting, and process optimization, is not a generic transformation brief. It requires someone who has already delivered under real regulatory and reporting pressure.

At CNP Assurances, I rebuilt the investment accounting production line under Solvency II constraints: 350 billion euros in assets under management, delivered in 18 months, on time, with the sub-ledger and reconciliation controls the regulator expected. That work sat exactly where this role sits: financial modeling, ROI evaluation, and compliance reporting under IFRS 9 and Solvency II, coordinated across Finance, Actuarial, IT, and Risk. I also led a SimCorp Dimension implementation from design through production, building the financial models and variance analysis the business used to judge feasibility before go-live. Across both, the constant was stakeholder alignment: getting senior finance leadership, technical teams, and auditors to agree on the same numbers before the deadline, not after.

I haven't worked inside a technology company. My delivery experience is entirely within insurance and asset management balance sheets, which shapes how I read financial risk but means the domain context here would be new.

Worth a call to see if that background maps onto what you need.
