As a senior consultant with 25 years deep in insurance operations and finance transformation, I bring exactly what this role demands: the ability to translate operational complexity into executable clarity, and the discipline to sustain it.

I've spent the last decade designing and embedding operating models where execution precision matters. At a major European insurer, I led the redesign of their claims and underwriting process architecture across 12 markets—simplifying workflows, embedding governance controls, and creating the operational playbooks that enabled teams to deliver consistently against SLAs. The result: 35% faster cycle times and a measurable shift in quality metrics within 18 months. That's the kind of end-to-end accountability this Head of Business Architecture role requires.

What makes this specific: I don't just design processes. I own the handoff to global teams. I build the frameworks that make standardization stick—the governance structures, the quality assurance discipline, the data integrity discipline that turns "we know what to do" into "we actually do it, everywhere." I've built operational communities across fragmented structures and embedded a bias toward measurable outcomes over activity.

The hybrid model in Bratislava works well for me. I'm based in Paris, travel when the mission demands it, and structure my time to be present where execution happens.

I'm ready to move fast on this. The role fits my sweet spot: high-impact operations leadership where clarity, discipline, and genuine delivery create competitive advantage.
