I'm a finance transformation specialist with 25 years in insurance—exactly the sector your client is navigating. Over the past decade, I've led operational redesigns, regulatory reporting upgrades, and technology implementations across Lloyd's platforms and broader (re)insurance groups. I understand what it takes to challenge legacy practices while maintaining day-to-day reporting integrity under regulatory pressure.

What sets me apart: I don't just advise on finance infrastructure. I deliver it. I've rebuilt GAAP/IFRS reporting structures for mid-sized insurers, led cross-functional programmes to migrate reporting systems, and coached finance teams through transition phases where technology and process change collide. I've also worked alongside actuarial and investment operations teams—so I speak the language across departments, not just finance.

Most recently, I've worked as an independent consultant on interim and project-based mandates. This means I'm accustomed to moving fast, building credibility quickly, and taking ownership of delivery in ambiguous environments. I'm genuinely interested in the Lloyd's market specifically; it's a sector with technical depth and regulatory complexity that requires both judgment and rigour.

One fair point: I'm currently self-employed through my advisory firm. I've done this by choice to maintain flexibility and deepen expertise in transformation work. A role like this—where I can embed in a team, drive strategic projects over time, and see infrastructure improvements through to completion—is exactly where I want to invest my next chapter.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my experience in finance transformation, regulatory reporting, and cross-functional delivery maps to your client's transition priorities.

Best regards,
Xavier Robitaille
