Re : Financial Reporting & Business Control Specialist

Consolidating financial data across business units while keeping IFRS reporting audit-ready and rebuilding controls at the same time is a specific kind of pressure: reporting, compliance, and process improvement all need to move together, not in sequence.

At CNP Assurances, I rebuilt the investment accounting production line under Solvency II constraints, covering 350 billion euros in assets under management, and delivered it in 18 months, on schedule, with the sub-ledger reconciled against the general ledger at each close. That work depended on the same discipline this role needs: consolidating data from multiple sources into a single reporting truth, then defending it in front of auditors. On IFRS 9 specifically, I've built ECL methodology, amortized cost, and asset classification schemes from scratch, including the VBA-driven journal entry generation that made month-end close auditable rather than manual. I've also led UAT and data migration streams where the whole point was data integrity: closing accounts, clearing suspense balances, and making sure the numbers stayed consistent from one system to the next.

Hybrid work is standard practice for me. At Clearwater, most of the delivery ran remotely across teams and time zones, with the same reporting rigor as on-site work.

Happy to walk through how this maps to AXA Partners' reporting and control setup on a call.
