Re : Operational Excellence Expert (Hybrid; m/f/x/d; 80- 100%)

Reimagining the Credit line's operating model end-to-end, and pushing GenAI into the workflow to gain real productivity rather than a pilot deck, is the kind of transformation brief that rewards someone who can hold both the design and the delivery at once.

I've spent my career on that exact combination: redesigning how finance and operations functions run under regulatory constraint, then delivering the change myself. On system implementations (SimCorp Dimension, Clearwater Analytics), I've worked the full cycle from target design through to production cutover, which means I've had to name process gaps early and build the controls around them rather than patch them later. On data migration and ledger cleanup, I've written the cahiers des charges, run the UAT, and closed out suspense accounts one reconciliation at a time. That's the same discipline this role needs when balancing global consistency against market-specific requirements: nothing gets called done until it reconciles. My PMO background adds the other half: taking over complex, stalled initiatives, rebuilding governance, and aligning stakeholders across Finance, Actuarial, IT, and Risk who don't naturally agree on priority.

My depth is in investment and finance operating models, not Credit & Surety underwriting product knowledge specifically, so that's a domain I'd be learning on the job rather than bringing in.

Worth a call to see where the fit is real.
