I bring 25 years of insurance and finance experience—the rare combination you need to lead this transformation. I've spent my career at the intersection of claims operations, regulatory complexity, and large-scale delivery, which maps directly to what SiriusPoint is building.

My value here is concrete: I design transformation roadmaps where technical delivery, stakeholder alignment, and execution discipline actually happen together. I've led similar programmes—platform migrations, process redesign, cross-functional governance where Claims, Underwriting, Finance, and IT had to move in sync. I know the friction points. I know how to set up governance so that external partners deliver on time, not slip into year three.

Two examples. At an insurer, I managed a complete redesign of their claims intake and processing platform, coordinating with four external vendors across six months while keeping Finance, Actuarial, and Ops on the same page—delivered on schedule, under budget. At another, I rebuilt the entire closing process for a regulatory reporting overhaul: mapped dependencies, managed 12+ stakeholders, wrote the playbook. Both required the same thing you're asking for now: someone who doesn't just track status, but removes blockers before they become delays.

I work as an independent consultant. That's an asset here. I'm hired to deliver, not to survive internal politics. I come in, clear-eyed, and focus entirely on your timeline and outcomes.

The honest gap: this role is contract-based; I typically work interim assignments. If that's the format SiriusPoint needs, I'm a fit. If you're building toward something permanent, we should discuss.

I'm in London regularly and available to start in 2025. Let's talk through the governance model and stakeholder structure you're building.
