

Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm writing to express my interest in the Lead Business Consultant – ABOR role at SimCorp.

For 25 years, I've worked exclusively in finance and insurance transformation. What matters here is this: I've spent the last decade as a senior consultant bridging technical requirements, regulatory constraints, and delivery pressure—exactly the sparring partner role you're describing. I've designed accounting processes for major financial institutions, led full-cycle implementations where end-users and IT teams needed translation, and managed project streams where clarity on "what" and "why" determined success or failure.

I bring three specific strengths for ABOR consulting. First, I understand the complete value chain from requirements capture through operational handoff—I've closed this loop repeatedly in complex regulatory environments. Second, I'm fluent in both business and technical languages; I can facilitate between CFO offices and engineering teams without losing precision. Third, I've consistently escalated and resolved issues by diagnosing root causes early, not reacting to breakdowns later.

One concrete example: I led the redesign of a major insurer's closing process across finance, actuarial, and operations—60+ stakeholders, three regulatory constraints, zero tolerance for error. We delivered on time by mapping dependencies ruthlessly and acting as the single point of clarity for conflicting priorities.

The honest part: I've worked as an independent consultant and interim leader, not in traditional full-time roles recently. I'm ready for this. Bruxelles works. The chance to specialize deeply in ABOR implementation with significant clients is exactly what I'm looking for.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my experience translates to SimCorp's project delivery model.

Best regards,
